Ian Robertson

Ian started wood turning in 1977 to get away from his normal job as a mechanic. In 1981 he could not do his normal job and so he took up his hobby as a living. He started in the usual way making bowls and other craft items and trying to sell them at the craft markets but his passion has always been spindle and architectural or structural turning. Ian was approached by a couple of larger building firms and turned verandah posts, balusters and king posts for them which lead to other work including turning nine metre poles for the Scientia building at Sydney University. Ian also does turned work for restorers and artists. Other major works he has done are numerous large bollards, light posts for New Quay, the Boardwalk at Yarra's Edge and numerous decorative posts for councils all over Australia.
